

I believe the people of this country can only be good citizens if they know the truth and that this is only attainable by having access to many different viewpoints and sources of information. It is/should be the duty of the media to provide these differing viewpoints. If one company is allowed to own the radio, t.v. and newspaper outlet in an area, how can the people ever know the whole truth? The media enjoys the public trust and should be regulated by government, because it exists for the good of the people. I drove from San Luis Obispo to Santa Barbara, CA today, a 100 mile drive, and kept coming across the same radio shows on the different radio channels. It was discouraging. Radio was far better before ownership was deregulated, and I believe as a result of the original deregulation many independent owners had to go out of business because they could not compete with the large corporate owners. Thank you for considering my comment. Carol Fleury.
